Small town life (non-North American) Synopsis / Plot 1975, Swiss Alps: An unashamedly beautiful but disturbed and mute woman appears in a remote mountain village. Only the village policeman Reusch takes care of the strange woman and tries to find out who she is. There is evidence that it came from the Höhenalp Alp, where shepherds do unthinkable things to get the society of women. Many dark truths are revealed that would have been better hidden. A tragedy of desire, madness and murder is brought into a seemingly pure and perfect world. It is the beginning of a nightmare of religious madness, hypocrisy, abuse and belief in demons that destroys a young family and destroys an entire village. It is based on an alpine fable of the same name. The film premiered at the Zurich Film Festival in 2010. [1] Plot 1975, Grisons Alps, Switzerland. A young priest is found hanged in a church tower. Shortly after the event, a mysterious girl appears in the village. Because of the hostility, she flees into the mountains. The lonely alpine shepherds Erwin and Albert are joined by a third man, Martin. During a long night, while he is drunk and high on absinthe, Albert makes a doll of brooms and hay, while Erwin Martin tells the story about Sennentuntschi. In the story, three men make such a doll, while the devil has pity on them and brings them to life. The next day a real girl appears in her lodge. Erwin warns Martin about the end of the story, in which Sennentuntschi kills all three men, but both rape them anyway. The girl takes revenge by slaughtering all the goats and killing Erwin, Albert dies in a fire by chance and Martin dies of blood poisoning when he was bitten by the girl during the rape. Meanwhile, the local (older) priest in the village encourages parishioners against the unknown girl and calls her a witch, bearer of evil and responsible for the recent death of a newborn. He supports his theory with a 1950 photo showing a young woman resembling the girl. Policeman Reusch is the only one who keeps reason and therefore clashes with the villagers. He tries to take the girl away, but is attacked by the villagers. However, the girl escapes. Reusch investigates further and finds out that the woman in the photo is the mother of the girl, who was impregnated by the priest who killed her and kept her daughter in captivity since birth. It is revealed that the young priest did not commit suicide, but was killed in a fight during the girl's escape. Reusch arrests and detains the priest and goes to the mountains in search of the girl. Reusch finds the girl alive and well in the lodge, but days after the deadly events. The girl made dolls out of men's furs, as told in the fable, which made Reusch sick and angry at her. She runs away with Reusch to follow her so far that she falls into a ravine. He goes after her and finds skinned corpses of shepherds as well as her body. Feeling responsible, he takes his own life. (January 2020) Peter Martin of Screen Anarchy explained that while the film's narrative was occasionally inconous, Mesquida's performance and cinematography made up for it. [3] Adrian Halen from HorrorNews.net Halen praised the writing of the film and the third act and wrote: Sennentuntschi is rooted in a horror/mystery genre premise that actually takes a different direction than many films of its genre. [4] Brad McHargue of Bloody Disgusting gave the film a mostly positive review, praising the performances (especially mesquidas), camera, soundtrack and growing suspense, while criticizing the disjointed nature and confusing ending.
